VISION

INFINITE POTENTIAL FOR THE EXTRORDINARY

Imagine a world,
Where our greatest wealth lies in humanity.
Love creates value.
In a place where trust is stronger than control.
In a place where a smile can achieve more than possessions.

One world,
in which money no longer determines what is valuable.

One world,
in which people can live off the values,
which they bring into the world every day.

One world,
in the sentence
"You can't make a living by being nice."
its validity has expired.

Welcome to IPOTE.
Welcome to the beginning of a new definition of value.

FOREWORD

Nice that you're here.

Perhaps you opened this vision paper deliberately. Perhaps it came into your hands more or less by chance. However our paths crossed – I'm glad you're taking the time to read these lines.

This vision doesn't aim to convince you of a new idea, nor does it claim to understand the world better than others. Rather, it's an invitation to reflect together on something that affects us all and has always connected us: the question of what is truly valuable in our lives and in our society.

If we're honest with ourselves, we already know the answer.

The most precious moments in our lives cannot be bought. They arise where people are there for each other, where someone listens without looking at the clock, where a helping hand is offered without expecting anything in return, where a smile brightens someone else's day, or a simple "thank you" shows that a loving gesture has touched someone's heart.

It is precisely these moments that enrich our lives. They give us trust, security, and the feeling of not being alone. They remind us that we are connected as human beings and that even the smallest gesture of humanity can set something in motion.

And yet, we live in a world where this form of wealth is barely visible. We've learned to view economic success, possessions, and achievement as markers of value, while many of the things that truly sustain our lives find no place on our balance sheets. This is nobody's fault. It's simply the way our society has evolved over many generations.

Perhaps now is the right moment to broaden our perspective a little.

Not to reject what already exists, but to complement something that has always been there. For love, compassion, trust, and charity are not new values. They never had to be invented. They have accompanied humanity since its beginnings and continue to form the foundation of every fulfilling life and every vibrant community.

IPOTE was born out of this conviction.

Not as a technology. Not as a blockchain. Not as an NFT project, and not as a cryptocurrency. All of these are tools that can one day help make an idea visible. At its core lies something much simpler and yet much greater: the desire to reconsider the concept of value and to give things back the place they have long held in our lives.

IPOTE invites us to put people back at the center. Not because of their achievements, their success, or their possessions, but because of their capacity to love, to trust, to help, and to give hope to others.

Because every major change begins right there – not with a new system, but with a new perspective on what we value.

If this vision paper helps us to ask ourselves this question together and find the courage to base our answer on it, then it has already fulfilled its purpose.

Welcome to IPOTE.

Welcome to Infinite Potential for the Extraordinary.

1. WHAT IS TRULY VALUABLE?

Every person already carries the answer to this question within themselves. We don't have to invent it, and no one has to teach it to us. If we pause for a moment and look at our own lives not with our minds but with our hearts, we very quickly realize which moments have truly shaped us.

It's rarely the big purchases or the successes we remember with gratitude. Far more lasting are the encounters with people who have touched our lives. A friend who stayed when everyone else left. A mother who loves her child unconditionally. A stranger who helped without expecting anything in return. A person who simply listened. A smile at the right moment. A hug that offered more comfort than a thousand words.

All these moments have something in common. They cannot be bought. They arise from love, compassion, trust, and the sincere desire to make another person's life a little brighter. That is precisely why these moments are the true wealth of our lives.

Nevertheless, as a society, we often focus our attention on other values. We measure economic success, productivity, and growth with great precision because they can be calculated and compared. But they never tell the whole story. Because the most valuable thing a person can give cannot be captured on any balance sheet and cannot be fully expressed in any currency.

And that is precisely why it is time to rethink, redefine, and expand the concept of value.

Not by undervaluing money or economic achievement. Both have their place and their importance. And yet, we must acknowledge that there is a form of value that precedes everything else. Without it, there would be no family, no friendship, no community, and no trust. Without it, there would be no humanity.

Love.

It is the source of every helping hand, every open ear, every sincere thank you, and every gesture that comes from the heart. From it arise compassion, trust, hope, and connection. It is not merely a feeling between two people. It is the force that creates community and sustains life.

When we begin to recognize love as the highest form of value, our view of the world changes. Then, a person is no longer judged solely by what they possess or achieve, but also by how they enrich the lives of others. A kind word becomes more than mere politeness. A sincere thank you becomes more than a platitude. A helping hand becomes a visible expression of what truly holds our society together.

True prosperity, therefore, does not mean possessing more and more, but rather producing more and more of what truly makes life worth living.

This is precisely where IPOTE's vision begins. Not with a new currency, but with a new perspective on value. Because when we change what we consider valuable, everything else gradually begins to change as well.

2. THE GREATEST WEALTH OF MANKIND

When we begin to reconsider the concept of value, our view of wealth inevitably changes as well.

For generations, we've learned to associate wealth primarily with money, possessions, and material goods. They provide security, open up opportunities, and can enrich our lives in many ways. There's nothing wrong with that. But they are not the source of our prosperity. They are only one part of it.

The true wealth of humanity lies much deeper.

It manifests itself wherever people meet with openness, where trust is allowed to grow, where compassion is stronger than indifference, and where a helping hand becomes an act of pure love. It lives in friendships that last a lifetime, in families who are there for one another, in people who give their time, in creative ideas that enrich the lives of many, and in hope that is never lost, even in difficult times.

All of these are treasures that can neither be possessed nor held onto. And yet, they are precisely what truly enriches our lives.

This is precisely one of the greatest misconceptions of our time. We have learned to believe that what is most valuable must always be the rarest. That scarcity determines value, and that prosperity arises primarily where something is only available in limited quantities.

But when we look at what truly fulfills our lives, we discover something amazing.

The most important things are not scarce at all.

Love doesn't diminish when we give it away. Trust grows when we give it. Compassion multiplies when we practice it. Hope spreads when we share it. Creativity knows no bounds because every idea opens the door to new ones. A smile loses none of its power when it's given to someone else.

Humanity's greatest wealth, therefore, follows different laws than material possessions. It definitely doesn't diminish when we share it. It grows.

That's precisely why it's time we redefined prosperity. Not as something we keep for ourselves, but as something we create together.

A society that lives love becomes richer.

A society that places trust in others becomes stronger.

A society that fosters compassion becomes more humane.

And a society that recognizes that its greatest wealth lies in the hearts of its people will experience a form of abundance that cannot be fully described by any number in this world.

This abundance is not a dream or a distant vision. It has accompanied humanity since the beginning. It has always been there. We don't have to create it. We can learn to perceive it again, give it space, and allow it to become what it always should have been: the absolute foundation of our coexistence.

3. THE NEW DEFINITION OF VALUE

Every era is shaped by the values it recognizes and promotes. These values determine where we focus our attention, what decisions we make, and what kind of future we shape together. What a society considers valuable will grow. What it rewards will increase.

Therefore, it is worthwhile to re-examine one of the most fundamental questions of all:

What do we as a society want to consider valuable in the future?

Over many generations, we have learned to view economic performance as a central measure of our society. Performance creates prosperity, enables progress, and contributes significantly to our lives. It deserves recognition and will continue to have its important place in the future.

But what if performance is not the source of all value?

For what truly sustains our lives arises precisely where no invoice is written, no contract signed, and no return is expected. It arises where people are there for one another, where trust is given, where compassion is practiced, and where someone simply gives another person the feeling: You are not alone.

A mother who lovingly holds her child in her arms creates value.

A friend who listens, even though he himself has had a difficult day, creates value.

A person who helps a stranger without expecting anything in return creates value.

An honest thank you creates value.

A smile creates value.

A hug creates value.

Not because these gestures have a price, but because they enrich life.

This is precisely where a new definition of value begins.

Value is not created only where money flows.

Value is created where life becomes brighter, easier, more joyful, more hopeful and more humane.

This form of value creation has accompanied humanity since its beginnings. Without it, there would be no families, no friendships, no communities, and no society. It is the invisible foundation upon which everything else is built.

And yet, to this day, it remains largely invisible.

IPOTE doesn't want to change this by evaluating love or measuring humanity in numbers. Love loses its magic as soon as it becomes an achievement to be compared or controlled. Therefore, it's not about measuring compassion, but about restoring it to the place it has always deserved.

When we begin to consciously acknowledge these values and give them the importance they already hold in our lives, we change far more than just individual structures. We change the way we look at one another. And in doing so, we gradually change the direction in which our society develops.

Money does not create value.

Value creates money.

From this new definition of value emerges a new form of economic recognition. The technological foundations of IPOTE – NFTs, blockchain, and all future developments – serve a single vision: to create an infrastructure through which a society's economic success can flow back to the people who generate its greatest wealth every day.

A hug should no longer be economically worthless.

A sincere thank you should no longer go unnoticed.

A helping hand should no longer remain invisible.

Charity is value creation.

And value creation deserves economic recognition.

Therefore, IPOTE pursues the goal of creating a world in which people no longer have to live solely from their labor, but above all from the humanity they bring to this world. A world in which lived love, trust, care, and mutual support form the basis of a new human and economic cycle.

Only when a person can live from the values that underpin our society will we have redefined the concept of value.

Then a sentence that has accompanied generations becomes a memory of a bygone era.

Not because we disproved him.

But because we have created a new reality.

You can make a living by being nice.

4. THE ECONOMY OF ABUNDANCE

When we begin to understand value in a new way, our view of prosperity also changes.

Our economy today is characterized in many areas by a simple and understandable reality: material resources are limited. Raw materials, energy, food, and housing are not available in unlimited quantities. Scarcity therefore plays a crucial role and has always influenced how we conduct business, plan, and act.

However, acknowledging this reality does not mean that it applies to everything that enriches our lives.

Because in addition to material goods, there is a wealth that follows entirely different laws.

Love doesn't diminish when we give it away. On the contrary, it grows. Trust is created by giving it and becomes stronger with every person who reciprocates it. Knowledge loses none of its value when we share it. Often, quite the opposite is true: a shared idea gives rise to new thoughts, new possibilities, and new paths. A smile loses none of its warmth because we give it to another person. Compassion doesn't exhaust itself but expands when we begin to be there for one another.

The most valuable things in our lives therefore do not follow the principle of scarcity.

They follow the principle of abundance.

The more we share them, the bigger they become.

Wealth needs to be redefined. Not just as the sum of what we own, but as the sum of what we create together. A society doesn't become rich by producing ever more. It becomes rich when people trust one another, are there for each other, and enrich each other's lives. That's precisely where the greatest wealth arises – long before it shows up on a balance sheet or in a bank account.

A community where people trust each other possesses a wealth that cannot be found on a bank statement.

A family that is there for each other lives in a prosperity that cannot be calculated.

A society in which people are willing to help, share, and take responsibility for one another possesses a treasure greater than any material resource.

IPOTE understands abundance not as unlimited possession, but as the natural characteristic of all those values that grow by being shared.

Love.

Trust.

Compassion.

Hope.

Friendship.

Humanity.

The more space we give them, the more they emerge.

True abundance begins precisely where we realize that the greatest wealth in our lives never diminishes by sharing it with others.

On the contrary.

It becomes a source from which new things can always emerge.

An economy that recognizes and promotes this form of wealth serves not only material prosperity. It serves life itself.

That is precisely the true meaning of abundance.

It's not always about having more.

But to produce more and more of what makes life richer for everyone.

IPOTE therefore does not merely want to remind us of this form of wealth. IPOTE wants to give it a firm place in our economy. Because as long as humanity finds no economic expression, a significant part of our societal wealth remains invisible.

IPOTE's vision is a future where love, trust, care, and compassion not only enrich our lives together but also form the basis of a new economic cycle. A future where people no longer live solely from their labor, but also from the value they create for others through their humanity.

Only then will the economy of abundance become more than just an idea. Only then will it become a reality in which the most valuable aspects of our lives are no longer outside our economy, but become its very foundation.

5. TRUST

There is hardly anything that shapes our coexistence more than trust. It doesn't arise from laws, contracts, or control, but grows slowly between people who treat each other with openness and experience that they can rely on one another. Trust cannot be forced or prescribed. It is a gift that always arises where honesty, respect, and humanity have their place.

Looking at our own lives, we quickly realize how much trust already plays a role in our daily routines. We trust the people we love. We trust friends to whom we confide our thoughts. We trust that someone will catch us when we fall, and we trust that a sincere promise means more than any signature on a piece of paper. We trust life itself. Without trust, community would hardly be possible. Every family, every friendship, every company, and every society ultimately thrives on this invisible connection between people.

And yet, over time, we have created many structures primarily designed to replace trust with control. Of course, every community needs rules, responsibility, and transparency. These provide orientation and security. But control alone can never generate what fosters trust. It can monitor behavior, but it cannot create open hearts. It can prevent mistakes, but it cannot create connection.

IPOTE therefore believes in a different path.

Because trust should always be the greater goal. Where people trust each other, less control is needed. Where trust grows, personal responsibility, compassion, and a willingness to stand up for one another emerge. A society that fosters trust strengthens not only the individual but also society as a whole.

Trust doesn't mean being naive or turning a blind eye to reality. It means giving space to the good in people and creating structures that allow this good to flourish. Every person possesses the capacity to approach others with openness, helpfulness, and compassion. Trust is an invitation to view these qualities not as exceptions, but as the foundation of our coexistence.

Perhaps this is precisely one of the greatest changes that IPOTE wants to contribute to: not constantly developing new systems to control people, but finding ways to empower them to trust their own humanity and to recognize the humanity of others as something valuable.

Because trust is far more than a pleasant feeling. It is the foundation of every vibrant community and every peaceful future. Where trust is allowed to grow, relationships develop in which people can flourish. There, cooperation becomes natural, help is given freely, and responsibility is not perceived as a burden, but as an expression of our shared connection.

Therefore, trust is far more than a personal decision.

It is the highest form of social intelligence.

Because a society that has learned to trust needs less and less control. It doesn't expend its energy managing mistrust, but rather cultivating humanity. And therein lies the power upon which a future can be built, a future in which people encounter one another not out of fear, but out of trust.

6. THE CULTURE OF MEMORIES

Everyone carries memories within them that stay with them for a lifetime. It's not always the big events that leave the deepest marks. Often it's the small moments when we felt truly seen, understood, or loved. A sincere thank you that comes from the heart. A hug that offers comfort. A person who stays when things get tough. A word that gives us courage when we don't know what to do anymore.

Such moments remind us what really matters in life.

These memories are the most valuable treasure we can collect as human beings.

The Memories series originated from this idea.

A memory is a conscious remembrance of a moment of shared humanity. It doesn't simply preserve words or events, but the meaning behind them. It tells of a helping hand, of gratitude, of trust, of forgiveness, of compassion, or of an encounter that touched someone's heart.

And yet, for IPOTE, remembering means something much deeper.

It doesn't just mean looking back on past moments. It also means remembering who we truly are at our core.

In a world where people are often defined by achievement, success, possessions, or their social role, Memories aims to remind us of something that has never been lost: the inherent value of every human being.

The fact that we don't have to achieve something to be valuable.

The fact that our greatest strength lies not in what we possess, but in who we are.

The idea that love, compassion, creativity and connection are not qualities we have to acquire, but something that is already inherent in us.

Therefore, the deepest form of remembering is the memory of our own being.

To the light that every person carries within.

To the ability to love.

To the ability to help.

To the ability to give hope and make a difference in another person's life.

A memory game is therefore not just a remembrance of something that has happened.

It is also an invitation to live more consciously again.

It reminds us that every moment holds the potential to create something truly valuable.

IPOTE wants to make these memories visible, not to judge people, but to honor the good. A memory game creates no comparison or hierarchy. It doesn't say who gave more love or whose contribution was more important.

Because love knows no hierarchy.

A small gesture can be just as valuable as a big one.

A single sentence can change a life.

A quiet moment of support can mean more than a grand public act.

Every memory game is unique because every person is unique.

Over time, this becomes a collection of human experiences that reveals what connects us. A collection of moments when people were there for each other. A collection of signs that humanity has always existed and always will.

As humanity, we need not only new technologies, new systems, or new structures.

What we need most is a reminder.

A reminder of what really matters.

A reminder that our greatest value can never be found outside ourselves.

A reminder that love is not something we have to create.

It is something we should remember.

Therefore, every memory is more than just a stored memory.

It is a sign that love has been lived.

And at the same time, an invitation to pass this love on.

Because the most important memory we can preserve is the memory of who we truly are.

7. IPOTE – INFINITE POTENTIAL FOR THE EXTRAORDINARY

A name can be more than just a label. Sometimes a name carries within it a memory, an idea, and a vision of what wants to emerge. That is precisely what IPOTE is.

Infinite Potential for the Extraordinary.

Endless potential for the exceptional.

To understand the meaning of this name, the journey begins with the first word:

Infinite.

This word reminds us that as human beings, we are more than what is visible from the outside. We are not just our story, our successes, our mistakes, or the roles we play in life. Behind all of that lies something deeper – something that makes each person unique.

Within each of us lies an infinite source of love, creativity, and creative power.

We possess the capacity to create something new, to forge connections, to touch other people, and to shape the world through our very being. Life is not merely something that happens to us. It happens through us – through our decisions, our thoughts, our love, and the way we interact with one another.

Sometimes, over the course of our lives, we forget how much strength lies within us. Often, we have learned to define ourselves by limits, by what seems possible, by expectations, judgments, and ideas of who we should be.

But deep inside us exists something that was never limited.

A way to grow.

To create a possibility.

A way to continually discover new sides of ourselves.

That is precisely where our infinite potential lies.

Potential.

Potential doesn't mean we have to achieve something to be valuable. It doesn't mean we have to reach a certain point to earn our significance.

Our value already exists.

Our potential is something that lives within us, waiting to be remembered, unfolded, and lived.

Every person possesses potential that no one else can realize in the same way. Every person brings their own story, their own perception, and their own way of loving into this world.

That makes us unique.

And this is exactly where the last part of the name begins:

The Extraordinary.

The extraordinary ones.

IPOTE is not talking about a select few who are exceptional. It is not about people who have achieved more, own more, or receive more recognition than others.

IPOTE evokes something much simpler and yet much deeper:

We are all exceptional.

Every single person.

Not because we are perfect.

Not because we have to prove something.

But because every person is a unique expression of life.

There is no other person with the same history, the same experiences, the same thoughts, and the same ability to bring love into the world in their own unique way.

Every person carries something within them that can only become visible through them.

This is precisely one of the greatest wonders of our humanity: that we are all different and yet remain connected. That everyone is allowed to go their own way and yet is part of a greater whole.

Being exceptional therefore does not mean being superior to others.

It means seeing yourself and other people with new eyes.

It means recognizing that something precious lives within every person.

That every person is important.

That every person is needed.

That every person has something to give.

IPOTE is therefore not an invitation to become extraordinary.

It is an invitation to remember that we already are.

A reminder of our infinity.

A reminder of our potential.

A reminder that love is not something small or trivial, but one of the greatest creative forces we possess.

Because the biggest change doesn't begin with us becoming someone else.

It begins with us recognizing who we have always been.

8. MEMORIA – THE GUARDIANSHIP OF AN IDEA

Every great change begins with an idea. But an idea alone doesn't change the world. It needs people to bring it to life, to embody its values, and to take responsibility for ensuring its original meaning is preserved.

That's exactly what Memoria is for.

Memoria is the non-profit peace organization behind IPOTE. It is a non-profit association created to open a space for humanity, compassion, peace and connection, and to promote the values on which IPOTE is built.

The name Memoria already carries its meaning within it.

He remembers.

He reminds us what unites us as human beings.

He reminds us that behind all differences, cultures and ways of life lies a common origin: the ability to love, to feel, to create and to live together in peace.

Memoria sees itself as the guardian of this memory.

Not in the sense of ownership.

Not in the sense of control.

But in the sense of responsibility.

Because some values cannot truly be owned. Love cannot belong to anyone. Peace cannot belong to anyone. Humanity cannot be privatized.

They can only be lived, protected, and passed on.

Guardianship, therefore, does not mean claiming something for oneself. It means handling something valuable with care and ensuring that it retains its original meaning.

Memoria understands its mission in the same way that a person plants a seed not to own the tree, but so that it can grow and provide shade and fruit for many people.

The task is to hold the space in which IPOTE can develop.

The future form should remain open. A vibrant idea needs to grow, evolve, and find new paths. External structures may change over time, but the core values should always remain central.

Whether through charitable initiatives, technological developments or future forms of community – what matters is not the external form, but whether the original spirit is preserved.

The spirit of trust.

The spirit of love.

The spirit of humanity.

The spirit of the realization that every person is valuable and that a society should not only be measured by what it produces, but also by how it treats each other.

Memoria aims to create spaces where people can meet, learn from each other, and inspire one another. Spaces where culture, art, education, health, a connection to nature, and community action contribute to people developing greater trust in themselves and in life.

Because peace doesn't begin only where conflicts are resolved.

Peace begins where people truly encounter each other again.

Where we listen.

Where we want to understand.

Where we respect differences and at the same time recognize what unites us.

Memoria is therefore not the owner of an idea.

Memoria is a place of preservation.

A reminder that the most valuable things in life are not created through possession, but through lived connection.

A reminder that every generation has the opportunity to pass on love, trust, and humanity.

And that is precisely the true task of Memoria:

Not to determine where IPOTE must go.

But to ensure that it never forgets why it began.

9. THE FIRST 777 – THE FIRST STEP OF A NEW ECONOMY

Every great change begins with a first step. Before an idea can change the world, it needs a moment to become visible for the first time. For IPOTE, these first visible steps are the 777 Genesis NFTs – the first collection of a vision that extends far beyond digital art.

Each of these 777 works contains a single word: Smile.

Smile, you are unstoppable.

Smile, you are worthy of happiness.

Smile, you are making a difference.

Smile, you are stronger than you know.

Smile, you are a gift to the world.

And many more messages, all carrying the same memory.

They remind us that every person already possesses everything within them that makes them extraordinary. Not because they achieve more than others. Not because they own more. But because every person is unique and carries within them a value that can never be lost.

Each of these works begins in silence. Some on a white background, some on a black one. At first, nothing seems visible. Then, gentle clouds of color begin to move. Gold, blue, pink, turquoise, white, orange, or green flow into one another until, slowly, the message emerges from this movement.

This occurrence is no accident.

It tells the same story as IPOTE.

The essential element was always there. It didn't need to be created. It was allowed to become visible.

Just as the message slowly unfolds from the colors, we too can remember what we have always been deep down.

These 777 works are therefore not a collection of digital art.

They are the first visible expression of a new culture.

They carry within them the first memories. Memories of lived humanity. Memories of people who helped, comforted, listened, encouraged, or simply gave their time. Memories of all those moments that often change our lives more profoundly than any material achievement.

But their task does not end with preserving memories.

They also mark the beginning of a new economic vision.

For generations, our society has learned that only performance creates economic value. IPOTE expands on this idea. It reminds us that humanity also creates value—in fact, the greatest value a society can ever produce.

Therefore, these first 777 NFTs are intended to be far more than just carriers of memories. They form the foundation for a future in which humanity is not only visible but also receives recognition.

IPOTE's vision is a world where the love a person expresses is no longer excluded from our economy. A world where the values that make our coexistence possible begin to occupy the same place in our economy as labor, capital, or possessions.

Blockchain, NFTs, and all future technologies never serve themselves. They are tools. Their true purpose is to create an infrastructure through which real value can flow back to where the greatest societal wealth is created every day – to the people who care for one another.

One day, these first 777 NFTs will do more than just preserve memories. They will be part of a living network that helps support the everyday lives of their keepers. Not because humanity has a price, but because our economy is finally beginning to recognize its value.

Then a digital artwork becomes far more than just a collector's item.

It becomes a symbol of a new era.

To a place where memories are preserved, humanity is made visible, and a new form of economic appreciation becomes possible.

The first 777 NFTs are therefore not the goal of IPOTE.

They are the first seed.

A community can emerge from them.

A new economy can emerge from the community.

And from this new way of thinking, a world can emerge in which the old saying "You can't make a living by being nice" loses its validity.

Not because we disproved him.

But because together we have created a reality in which humanity is among the most valuable foundations of our coexistence – and in which an economy has learned to bear this value.

10. THE WAY

Every major change begins with a first step. But not every path can be fully planned from the outset. Some paths emerge as you walk them. They develop with every person who becomes part of them, with every experience gained, and with every new opportunity that arises.

IPOTE does not begin with a technology.

It begins with a decision.

By deciding to reconsider the value of life and having the courage to ask a question that our society has not asked for far too long:

What is truly valuable?

If we answer this question honestly, everything that results from it will change.

Then we realize that love is not just a pleasant feeling. That compassion is not just a personal trait. That trust, helpfulness, and humanity are far more than values that make our coexistence more agreeable. They are the foundation of every community. They are the invisible wealth upon which every society is built.

IPOTE wants to make this wealth visible and give it the place it has always deserved.

The journey there begins with the memories.

With memories of those moments when people were there for each other. With a sincere thank you. With a helping hand. With a listening ear. With a comforting hug. With someone who stayed even though it would have been easier to leave. From these memories arises a vibrant collection of what truly defines our humanity.

But memories alone are not the goal.

They are the beginning.

From them grows a community of people who share the same conviction: that the greatest wealth of our lives does not come from what we own, but from what we are to each other.

With every memory, this conviction becomes more visible. With every person who becomes part of IPOTE, not only a community grows, but also a new culture. A culture that begins to define value not solely by performance, possessions, or economic success, but by the contribution a person makes to the lives of others.

From this new culture, a new reality gradually emerges.

The technologies that IPOTE uses, or may one day develop itself, never serve an end in themselves. Blockchain is not the goal. NFTs are not the goal. A coin will not be the goal. All these tools have only one purpose: to create an infrastructure that makes the true wealth of our society visible and enables it to become part of our economic life.

Because as long as humanity has no place in our economic thinking, a significant part of our societal wealth remains invisible.

IPOTE therefore pursues a clear vision.

We want to contribute to a world where people no longer have to live solely on their work, but also on the humanity they bring into the world every day. A world where love, trust, care, and compassion are no longer merely admired, but recognized for what they truly are: the greatest value creation of a vibrant society.

When people begin to dedicate their time to one another, to support each other, to offer hope, and to create community, a value emerges that far exceeds what can currently be expressed in numbers. IPOTE aims to lay the foundation for this value to one day receive economic recognition.

Not because love has a price.

But because it is priceless.

That is precisely why it deserves a place in an economy that serves life.

We don't yet know what the technologies of the future will look like. They will change, just as each generation creates its own tools. The vision, however, remains the same.

It leads us to a society where money no longer determines what is valuable.

But rather, it is in the realm of what is valuable that money flows to.

Then one day no one will say anymore: "You can't make a living by being nice."

Not because that sentence was forgotten.

But because he has lost his truth.

Because together we have created a world in which humanity not only touches our hearts, but also sustains our lives.

That's exactly where IPOTE's path leads.

Step by step.

Memory game after memory game.

Person for person.

Until a vision becomes reality.

11. THE INVITATION

If you've read this far, then you're probably not here by chance.

Perhaps you've wondered why so much of what truly enriches our lives receives so little attention in our world. Why a person who listens, comforts, helps, gives hope, or is simply there for another often finds no place in the financial understanding of value that has shaped our society for generations.

IPOTE arose from precisely this question.

Not from the desire to create another project, not from the idea of a new technology, and not even from the thought of developing a new digital currency. All of these are tools. The true origin of IPOTE is the conviction that the time has come to redefine the concept of value.

Because everyone knows the difference between a high price and great value.

A high price does not automatically make something valuable.

And the most valuable things in life have never had a price.

A person's hand that helps us up when we have fallen.

The embrace that brings comfort without needing a single word.

Genuine interest in another person.

The trust that allows us to grow.

The time someone gives us, even though it is irreplaceable.

The love that changes our lives.

All these things have sustained our world since the beginning of humanity.

And yet we have never learned to recognize them for what they truly are.

The greatest form of added value that we as human beings can produce.

IPOTE therefore does not encourage you to own an NFT.

It also doesn't encourage you to become part of a blockchain or a new technology.

It invites you to be part of a new definition of value.

Because every era is shaped by the values it makes visible, protects, and promotes.

If we continue to recognize only those things as economically viable that can be produced, sold, or owned, our society will primarily produce these things in the future.

However, when we begin to understand love, trust, compassion, helpfulness and humanity as the greatest wealth of our community, not only does our view of life change.

Then the direction of our future changes.

IPOTE's vision is clear.

We want to contribute to a time when no one has to say: "You can't make a living by being nice."

Not because friendliness is sold.

Not because love has a price.

But because our society has learned that these very values create the greatest wealth and therefore deserve financial recognition.

When that day comes, it won't just be our understanding of money that has changed.

Our understanding of what it means to be human will have changed.

Until then, everything begins where every major change originates.

In a human being.

In making a decision.

With a smile.

With a sincere thank you.

With a helping hand.

During a hug.

A moment when we show another person that they are seen.

Sometimes these moments seem small.

In truth, they are the origin of everything.

Because every culture begins with an attitude.

Every community begins with one person.

And every new era begins with a decision.

The decision to no longer overlook the most valuable thing in our lives.

Welcome to IPOTE.

Welcome to a future where humanity is no longer priceless, but begins to take the place it has always been meant to be.

SUMMARY – WHAT IS IPOTE?

IPOTE stands for Infinite Potential for the Extraordinary.

And it's not just a few who are exceptional.

We are all extraordinary.

Every human being possesses infinite potential, infinite creativity, and the capacity for love. IPOTE aims to remind us of who we truly are and, at the same time, to help shape a world in which these very qualities are given the place they deserve.

Because our society today primarily measures value by performance, possessions, and economic success. But the most valuable things in our lives often arise where no price is attached: in a smile, a hug, a listening ear, a helping hand, or a sincere thank you.

IPOTE wants to redefine the concept of value.

Money does not create value.

Value creates money.

If we as a society begin to recognize humanity as our greatest wealth, then our economy should also follow this value.

That is precisely the vision of IPOTE.

We want to contribute to creating a future where people no longer live solely from their work performance, but also from the humanity they bring into the world every day. A future where love, trust, compassion, and charity are not just beautiful ideals, but are understood and economically recognized as the greatest form of social value creation.

The first step on this path is the 777 Genesis NFTs of the SMILE collection. They are far more than digital artworks. They are the first carriers of a new culture of remembrance. Memories will be created on them – remembrances of lived humanity, of help, gratitude, courage, hope, and love. Each memory makes visible what our world carries every day and yet so often remains invisible.

Over time, this should become a vibrant network that connects people and makes the value of their humanity visible. Blockchain, NFTs, smart contracts, and future technologies are never the goal. They are tools that help make this vision a reality.

In the long term, IPOTE pursues a clear goal: to enable a new form of value creation in which humanity is no longer outside our economy, but becomes its foundation. A world in which the saying "You can't live on being nice" loses its validity – not because love is being sold, but because our society finally recognizes that love, trust, and humanity create the greatest wealth we possess.

IPOTE is therefore not just an art project. It is not just a blockchain idea. It is not just a vision for a new currency.

IPOTE is an invitation to redefine the value of life.

Because the future doesn't begin with a new technology.

It begins with a new decision.

The decision to make humanity the most valuable asset of our society once again.
